Acting Like a Graduate Student

JONATHAN MULROY

I am a graduate student, and I aim, at least for now, to speak one...
I haven't much time to spare, but I must take the opportunity to mention a few matters that are of great importance in the current state of the profession. The profession is facing a major crisis, and it is imperative that we take immediate action to address the issues at hand.

Firstly, there is the issue of the growing disparity between the academic and professional worlds. This disparity is causing serious problems for both the academic and professional communities. The academic community is becoming more and more insulated from the professional world, and this is having a negative impact on the quality of research and scholarship.

Secondly, there is the problem of the growing popularity of the profession among non-academics. This trend is causing concern among many in the profession, and it is important that we take steps to address this issue.

Finally, there is the issue of the increasing cost of higher education. This is a problem that affects us all, and it is important that we work together to find solutions.

In conclusion, I urge all of us to take these issues seriously and to work towards finding solutions. Together, we can make a difference.
